The Mine Safety Review Commission, pursuant to KRS Chapter 351, protects the health and safety of coal miners by insuring the enforcement of mine safety regulations. Its three members, appointed by the governor, conduct hearings on safety violations and impose penalties for serious violations. The Commission has the power to revoke or suspend a mine's license or an individual miner's certification and fine certified miners up to the equivalent of wages for ten working days for their first offense.

The Commission is an independent agency attached to the Cabinet for Environmental and Public Protection, Office of the Secretary, for administrative purposes only.
